

I oppose allowing Low Power FM stations to take over frequencies currently used by FM translator stations. My family and I listen to and support the KLOVE Christian radio network and their signal is carried on translators in many areas. I believe that the service KLOVE provides is in the public interest because, as a listener supported station, they don't have to use valuable air time playing commercials or infomercials to raise money, as the other local Denver Christian radio stations do. IF KLOVE were to be displaced by a LPFM station, people with limited opportunity to listen to the radio might not be able to find Christian music, but instead find infomercials for dietary supplements, and that would be a dis-service to the public. I also listen to the Colorado Public Radio network when I travel, and their signal is also carried on translator stations in more rural areas.

Thank you for considering my comments.
